

Some Signs Of Pyramid Schemes

Contributed by Gibson Maseko
Saturday, 13 September 2008

There are some issues you need to know before you may proceed with the idea of operating a pyramid scheme from home to generate additional income. If you are looking to work from home in your computer, possibly using a pyramid scheme, just be aware of a few things first.

There are some issues you need to know before you may proceed with the idea of operating a pyramid scheme from home to generate additional income. If you are looking to work from home in your computer, possibly using a pyramid scheme, just be aware of a few things first.

Since not all being offered are legitimate, you need to make sure which of these sites offer genuine work at home opportunities you can participate. Usually it is the naive and gullible who are the first victims to put their heads to the slaughter. Always adopt the belief that you should be paid for the work you do online and not paying for getting a job.

The lure of joining a pyramid scheme program for free to make money simply sounds irresistible to many unsuspecting naive and gullible people. It is in fact a nightmare because you have to sign up and then 'upgrade to a status member' by buying the product in question, whether you want it or not. Instead of a free ride in the pyramid scheme as promised, you will now have to lend your shoulders to bear the strain of piggyback rides yourself.

Earning twenty dollars from a spending of sixty dollars is not so bad but to keep spending without earning anything in return is disastrous. Once trapped in the debacle known as a pyramid scheme you only have two sensible alternatives: you can slog on until the slippery climb gets too slippery or opt out before you get into more entanglements and deeper trouble and more loss of valuable time and money. There are companies that pay for work done on the Internet - you just have to know where to look and how to tell if they are legitimate. Once you have experience working on the internet, you will know automatically which company to trust and work for. Enter forums too to examine the reputation of different companies before you get involved working for them.

A lot of people were driven to the wall and lost a lot of money through pyramid schemes and many types of money making ideas. When a pyramid is structured with a spillover placement of members, those who joined in the early stages will be lucky and would make some money well over and above what they invest in the scheme but those who bring up the rear are the ones who will lose money. It is not easy to locate people who will buy sixty dollars worth of products they will never use to make a few dollars.

People are tricked into joining these schemes by the company omitting the fact that they will have to buy the products in order to earn something. After you sign up, they continue to send you emails, telling you that someone else has joined under you, 'upgrade now' to start generating an income. Well, in order to upgrade, you are going to have to buy that product and take a chance that someone else will feel the same way but in many cases, you are going to find out that you were the only one to do it.

After waiting to make money, you will give up and be out the for a product you never used. If people know that only the original product owners are reaping the benefits of every pyramid scheme, then it would be easier to find real work at home jobs on the internet. The need to investigate before signing up for any internet work at home jobs can be safely discounted, in the absence of pyramid scams.